1. What is the purpose of the `main` function in a C program?
The `main` function is the entry point of a C program. It is where the execution begins and it typically returns an integer value to the operating system to indicate the status of the program (0 for success, non-zero for error).

2. How do you declare a variable in C?
A variable is declared by specifying its data type followed by the variable name. For example, `int x;` declares an integer variable named `x`.

3. What is the difference between a variable and a constant in C?
A variable is a storage location whose value can change during the execution of a program. A constant is a value that remains fixed throughout the program. Constants are declared using the `const` keyword.

4. How do you control the flow of execution in a C program?
Flow control is achieved using conditional statements (`if`, `if-else`, `switch`) and loops (`for`, `while`, `do-while`).

5. What is a function in C?
A function is a block of organized, reusable code that is used to perform a single, related action. Functions provide better modularity for your application and a high degree of code reusability.

6. How do you pass arguments to a function in C?
Arguments are passed to a function by specifying them within the parentheses of the function call. The function signature (name and parameters) must match the actual arguments passed.

7. What is the difference between a local variable and a global variable in C?
A local variable is declared within a function and its scope is limited to that function. A global variable is declared outside any function and its scope is the entire program.

8. How do you handle errors in a C program?
Errors can be handled using conditional statements to check for error conditions and return appropriate values or exit the program using `exit()` or `_exit()`.

9. What is the purpose of the `printf` function in C?
The `printf` function is used to print formatted output to the standard output device (usually the console).

10. How do you read input from the user in a C program?
Input is read from the user using the `scanf` function, which reads formatted input from the standard input device (usually the keyboard).
