

Polar Bear

The polar bear is considered a marine mammal because it spends many months of the year at sea, however it is the only marine mammal to have powerful limbs and feet that allow it to go across land on foot. A male polar bear can weigh up to 1,500 pounds and can stand up to 9 feet tall. Polar bears have incredibly warm fur and can actually overheat at 50 degrees Celsius. Their fur consists of an underfur and is then covered by guard hairs. Guard hairs are longer, coarser hair that stick out of an animal's fur. The polar bear's coat is white, but usually starts to look yellow as it ages. Polar bears that are raised in captivity in warmer climates may actually have a greenish tint to their fur. This is because algae starts to grow inside the guard hair because of the heat and humidity! The polar bear is a carnivore and primarily eats seals in the wild. Their preferred way of hunting is called still-hunting. They use their excellent sense of smell to find a seal breathing hole and wait. A seal breathing hole is an opening in the ice where a seal can come up for a breath of air. A hungry bear will wait for hours in silence for a seal to appear and then swipe it up on land with a powerful paw. Taking the seal's head in its mouth, the polar bear crushes the seal's skull and enjoys a tasty meal. Polar bears rarely live past the age of 25 in the wild and their species may face challenges as the Earth changes. In 2008, the polar bear was placed on the Endangered Species List in North America. Although the hunting of polar bears has been banned for many years, the climate of their habitat continues to get warmer and the icy environment where they live is diminishing. Hopefully, the polar bear will be able to adapt and we will not lose this beautiful creature forever!
