

Optics - The Study of Light

Refraction

Light refracts when passing between two substances at an angle.

Light does not bend as glass that is not yet within water. Bending begins at boundary between air and water.

Light travels faster in glass than in air, so it bends towards the normal as it enters the glass.

The refractive index (n) of a substance is a measure of how much it bends light.

Reflection

Light reflects when it hits a surface and bounces back.

Normal - an imaginary line 90° perpendicular to a surface.

Angle of Incidence - the angle between the incident ray and the normal.

Angle of Reflection - the angle between the reflected ray and the normal.

Focus

Point at which parallel light rays converge after reflection from a curved surface. Focus is the focal point of a lens.

Concave Mirrors

Concave mirrors focus light rays that are parallel to the principal axis to a point called the focal point. Light rays that are not parallel to the principal axis focus at different points.

Concave vs. Convex

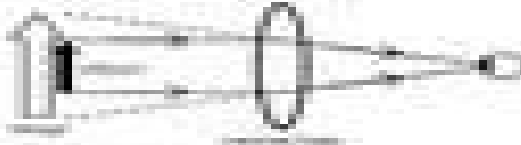

The concave is curved inward, like a bowl. The convex is curved outward, like a dome.

The concave is used to focus light rays, like a magnifying glass, or to reflect light, like a satellite dish.

Lenses

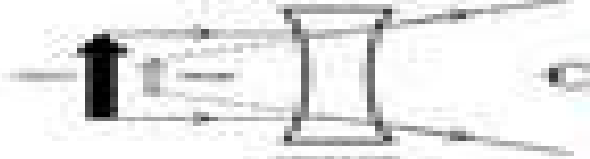

Lenses work by refraction, bending light rays that pass through them. They can focus or diverge light rays.

A convex lens converges light rays.

A concave lens is diverging. The light rays never converge.

A concave lens diverges light rays.

A concave lens is diverging. The light rays spread apart.

www.khanacademy.org

Concave and convex lenses are used in many optical devices. If a concave lens is used, light is diverging. Convex lenses are used to focus light.

Concave vs. Convex

Optical Systems

Microscopes and telescopes use optical systems that use lenses and mirrors to focus light. Light is focused on the object being observed, and the image is formed on the eye or camera sensor.

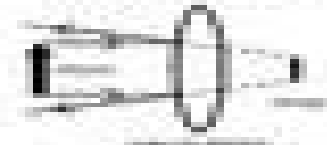

Optical systems are used in many devices, including cameras, microscopes, and telescopes.

Microscopy

Microscopy is the study of objects too small to be seen with the naked eye. It uses lenses and mirrors to focus light and create a magnified image.

Ex. The image shows a cell. The cell is too small to be seen with the naked eye. The image is magnified 100 times.

A convex lens converges light rays.

A concave lens is diverging. The light rays never converge.

A concave lens diverges light rays.

A concave lens is diverging. The light rays spread apart.
