By using multiple sampling techniques, researchers can determine how many people are in a single neighborhood that is subject to this environmental effect. The researchers found that 100,000 people live in the area.

15. The second challenge concerns the ex ante costs and the incentives for any state involved with such an arrangement. The challenge arises in part from the fact that a state's costs of providing an aid arrangement will be affected by the number of other states involved in the arrangement.
16. It should also be kept in mind that the fact that a state is involved in an aid arrangement does not mean that it will not also be involved in other aid arrangements.
