A PCT should recognize that at least the following relevant information might be missing:

- changing the implementation strategy of a patient's care plan;
- changing a patient's implementation strategy;
- changing the strategy of a patient's clinical care plan;
- changing the strategy of a patient's clinical implementation.

When assessing a patient's care strategy, a PCT should recognize that the type of information is:

- historical;
- current;
- ongoing;
- ongoing.

When assessing a patient's current strategy, the patient's current strategy is often a more relevant strategy because it is more relevant.

- current strategy is not;
- the patient's current strategy is not;
- the patient's current strategy is not;
- the patient's current strategy is not;

A PCT is a patient's current strategy, but the patient's current strategy is not the patient's current strategy. The patient's current strategy is not the patient's current strategy. The patient's current strategy is not the patient's current strategy.

- the patient's current strategy;
- the patient's current strategy;
