

PLANT REPRODUCTION

Reproduction in Gymnosperms

Gymnosperms are seed-bearing plants that do not have flowers and fruits. They have a separate male and female reproductive system. The male reproductive system consists of strobili (cones) that produce pollen grains. The female reproductive system consists of ovules that develop into seeds.

The male strobilus is called a microsporangium. It contains microspores that develop into pollen grains. The female strobilus is called a megasporangium. It contains megaspores that develop into ovules. The pollen grains are carried by the wind to the female strobilus, where they fertilize the ovules.

The fertilized ovule develops into a seed. The seed is covered by a protective layer called a seed coat. The seed coat is made of two layers: the outer layer is called the testa and the inner layer is called the endosperm.

The seed is then dispersed by the wind. The seed can remain dormant for a long time before it germinates. When the seed germinates, it grows into a new plant. The new plant is called a seedling. The seedling has two main parts: the root system and the shoot system. The root system is responsible for anchoring the plant and absorbing water and nutrients from the soil. The shoot system is responsible for photosynthesis and growth.

Life Cycle of Gymnosperms

The life cycle of gymnosperms is a continuous cycle that starts with the seed and ends with the seed. The cycle consists of the following stages:

The life cycle of gymnosperms is a continuous cycle that starts with the seed and ends with the seed. The cycle consists of the following stages: 1. Seed: The seed is the starting point of the life cycle. It is a dormant state of the plant. 2. Seedling: The seedling is the first stage of growth. It has two main parts: the root system and the shoot system. 3. Young Tree: The young tree is the next stage of growth. It has a more developed root system and shoot system. 4. Pollen Grains: The young tree produces pollen grains. These grains are carried by the wind to the ovules. 5. Ovules: The ovules are the female reproductive organs. They contain the egg cells. 6. Fertilization: The pollen grains fertilize the egg cells in the ovules. 7. Seed: The fertilized ovule develops into a seed. The seed is then dispersed by the wind. The cycle repeats.
