ROOT TIP EXAMINATION

AIMS/INTRODUCTION
To examine the structure of the root tip.

THEORY
The root tip is the site of cell division. The cells are arranged in a meristem, which is a region of undifferentiated cells. The cells are arranged in a meristem, which is a region of undifferentiated cells. The cells are arranged in a meristem, which is a region of undifferentiated cells.

2. Stain the section with toluidine blue.
3. Mount the section on a slide.
4. Examine the section under a microscope.

RESULTS
The root tip is divided into three regions: the meristem, the elongation zone, and the maturation zone. The meristem is the region where cells are dividing. The elongation zone is the region where cells are elongating. The maturation zone is the region where cells are differentiating.

PHOTOTROPISM

To investigate the response of a plant to light.

THEORY
Phototropism is the growth of a plant towards light. It is caused by the hormone auxin, which is produced in the shoot apical meristem. Auxin promotes cell elongation, and it is more concentrated on the side of the plant that is away from the light. This causes the plant to bend towards the light.

EXPERIMENTAL PROCEDURE
1. Grow a plant in a container of water.
2. Place the container in front of a light source.
3. Observe the plant's growth over time.

RESULTS
The plant bends towards the light source. This is because the auxin hormone is more concentrated on the side of the plant that is away from the light, causing the cells on that side to elongate more than the cells on the side towards the light.

CONCLUSION
The plant exhibits phototropism, growing towards the light source. This is due to the uneven distribution of the auxin hormone, which promotes cell elongation on the side away from the light.

EXPERIMENTAL PLANTING TO INVESTIGATE MICROBIAL GROWTH

AIMS/INTRODUCTION
To investigate the growth of microorganisms.

THEORY
Microorganisms are small organisms that can grow in a variety of environments. They can be studied using a variety of techniques, including culturing on agar plates. The growth of microorganisms can be measured by the number of colonies that form on the plate.

EXPERIMENTAL PROCEDURE
1. Prepare a suspension of microorganisms in a liquid medium.
2. Inoculate a series of agar plates with different volumes of the suspension.
3. Incubate the plates for a period of time.
4. Count the number of colonies that form on each plate.

RESULTS
The number of colonies increases with the volume of the suspension inoculated. This is because there are more microorganisms in the larger volume, and therefore more colonies are able to grow.

CONCLUSION
The growth of microorganisms is directly proportional to the number of microorganisms inoculated. This is because each microorganism has the potential to form a colony.
