LASER TREATMENT CONSIDERATIONS (CAUTION)

Once laser radiation is absorbed into the skin, it is important to apply laser adjustments to the laser energy profile settings based on the patient skin type.

Longer pulses on darker skin, more energy, increase cooling, surface temperature.

With the three configurations, laser penetration depth of a 0.50mm-0.60mm laser is appropriate. These should result with enough energy to integrate with the skin.

It is advisable to follow common skin laser safety with the appropriate classification of skin types.

The table below details Fitzpatrick classification of skin types.

FITZPATRICK CLASSIFICATION

Type I	Always Burns, never tans.
Type II	Usually Burns, difficult to tan.
Type III	Sometimes Burns, average tan.
Type IV	Hardly Burns, tans with ease.

WARTS

BACKGROUND

Warts are caused by the human papilloma virus (HPV). The virus causes skin to grow faster, which causes a bump. Though HPV is contagious, having someone else's wart does not mean the other person will definitely catch the virus. It depends on the particular skin condition and the strength of a person's immune system. Blisters or cuts on the skin may make infection more likely.

Warts can develop anywhere on the body, but typically they appear on the bottom (plantar side) of the foot. Older warts grow deep into the skin, usually the growth occurs slowly.

There are two types of warts: common warts and plantar warts.

A solitary wart is a single wart. It often increases in size and may eventually multiply, forming additional "satellite" warts. Most warts are a cluster of several small warts growing closely together in one area. These warts are more difficult to treat than solitary warts.

Symptoms

The symptoms of a plantar wart may include:

- Itchy, raised skin. Often a plantar wart resembles a cauliflower because of its rough, thick texture.
- Pain, swelling, and bleeding may be painful, especially when the wart is stepped on.
- Tiny black dots. These often appear on the surface of the wart. The dots are actually the blood contained in the capillaries.
