Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Allopatric speciation occurs when geographic barriers prevent mating between members of the same breeding population
- Allopatric speciation can occur in two ways:
 - Allopatric speciation can occur when a geographic barrier (like a mountain range or a body of water) separates a population into two groups. Over time, the two groups may evolve differently due to different selective pressures, leading to the formation of new species.
 - Allopatric speciation can also occur when a population is divided into two groups by a physical barrier, such as a mountain range or a body of water. Over time, the two groups may evolve differently due to different selective pressures, leading to the formation of new species.
- Allopatric speciation is the most common type of speciation, accounting for about 80% of all speciation events.
