Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the women was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The walking program significantly improved the women's physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the women's quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

1. Introduction

1. What is the purpose of the study?
The purpose of the study is to investigate the effect of a new teaching method on student performance in mathematics.

2. What is the research question?
The research question is: Does the new teaching method significantly improve student performance in mathematics compared to the traditional method?

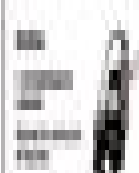

3. What are the variables in the study?
The independent variable is the teaching method (traditional vs. new). The dependent variable is student performance in mathematics, measured by test scores.

4. What is the hypothesis?
The hypothesis is that students who use the new teaching method will achieve higher test scores than students who use the traditional method.

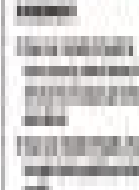

5. What is the significance of the study?
The significance of the study is that it aims to determine if the new teaching method is more effective than the traditional one, which could lead to improved educational outcomes.
