Answer the following questions:

- 1.1 Describe the hydrologic cycle, components, and processes. The hydrologic cycle is a continuous process that moves water from the atmosphere to the land and back to the atmosphere. It is a cycle of water that is constantly moving. The cycle is driven by the sun, which provides the energy for evaporation. The cycle is also driven by the Earth's gravity, which causes water to flow downhill. The cycle is a complex process that involves many different components and processes. The components of the hydrologic cycle include the atmosphere, the land, and the oceans. The processes of the hydrologic cycle include evaporation, condensation, precipitation, infiltration, and runoff.
- 1.2 Describe the different types of precipitation, and the factors that control precipitation. Precipitation is the process by which water falls from the sky. There are three main types of precipitation: rain, snow, and sleet. Rain is the most common type of precipitation. It is formed when water vapor in the air condenses into liquid droplets. Snow is formed when water vapor in the air condenses into ice crystals. Sleet is formed when rain falls through a layer of cold air and freezes into ice pellets. The factors that control precipitation include temperature, humidity, and wind. Temperature is the most important factor. Higher temperatures lead to higher rates of evaporation, which leads to higher rates of precipitation. Humidity is also important. Higher humidity leads to higher rates of condensation, which leads to higher rates of precipitation. Wind is also important. Wind can carry moisture from one area to another, which can lead to higher rates of precipitation in some areas and lower rates in others.
- 1.3 Describe the different types of erosion, and the factors that control erosion. Erosion is the process by which soil and rock are removed from the Earth's surface. There are three main types of erosion: water erosion, wind erosion, and glacial erosion. Water erosion is the most common type of erosion. It is caused by the flow of water over the Earth's surface. Wind erosion is caused by the flow of wind over the Earth's surface. Glacial erosion is caused by the flow of glaciers over the Earth's surface. The factors that control erosion include the type of rock, the slope of the land, and the amount of water or wind. The type of rock is the most important factor. Harder rocks are more resistant to erosion than softer rocks. The slope of the land is also important. Steeper slopes are more prone to erosion than flatter slopes. The amount of water or wind is also important. Higher amounts of water or wind lead to higher rates of erosion.
- 1.4 Describe the different types of sedimentation, and the factors that control sedimentation. Sedimentation is the process by which sediment is deposited. There are three main types of sedimentation: fluvial sedimentation, glacial sedimentation, and eolian sedimentation. Fluvial sedimentation is the most common type of sedimentation. It is caused by the flow of water over the Earth's surface. Glacial sedimentation is caused by the flow of glaciers over the Earth's surface. Eolian sedimentation is caused by the flow of wind over the Earth's surface. The factors that control sedimentation include the type of sediment, the slope of the land, and the amount of water or wind. The type of sediment is the most important factor. Coarser sediments are more resistant to erosion than finer sediments. The slope of the land is also important. Steeper slopes are more prone to erosion than flatter slopes. The amount of water or wind is also important. Higher amounts of water or wind lead to higher rates of sedimentation.
- 1.5 Describe the different types of metamorphism, and the factors that control metamorphism. Metamorphism is the process by which rocks are changed into new rocks. There are three main types of metamorphism: diagenesis, diagenesis, and diagenesis. Diagenesis is the most common type of metamorphism. It is caused by the flow of water over the Earth's surface. Diagenesis is caused by the flow of glaciers over the Earth's surface. Diagenesis is caused by the flow of wind over the Earth's surface. The factors that control metamorphism include the type of rock, the slope of the land, and the amount of water or wind. The type of rock is the most important factor. Harder rocks are more resistant to metamorphism than softer rocks. The slope of the land is also important. Steeper slopes are more prone to metamorphism than flatter slopes. The amount of water or wind is also important. Higher amounts of water or wind lead to higher rates of metamorphism.
