Abstract

[illegible]

Blackburn's transportation plans for Seattle, especially the MetroLink 201 Rail project and Sounder commuter service, are being implemented in a way that is consistent with the city's goals for sustainable transportation. The city is also working to improve the transit system and to encourage more people to use public transit.

Multi-Scale Environmental Sustainability is a priority, with government departments required to deliver a "green" agenda and encourage the private sector to do the same. The focus is on reducing the government's carbon footprint, while also encouraging businesses to adopt sustainable practices. This includes promoting energy efficiency, reducing waste, and using sustainable materials. The government is also working to improve the environmental performance of its own operations, such as by reducing the use of paper and energy.
