- Long-run demand for physicians: Long-run demand and short-run demand curves for a group of people depend on their skills. If they have the sufficient training, long-run demand includes all the doctors and nurses who are currently in the profession. Changes in demand tend to be in excess and persistent.
- Short-run demand is inelastic: The short-run demand will be inelastic. The short-run demand is calculated for each year separately. Compared to the long-run demand, the short-run demand is inelastic.
- When a profession is healthy: "No entry" will happen in the future. If there is no entry cost, a young person will enter. There is a small cost, a small value of λ . If there is no sufficient salary, there will be no new entry. When the profession is healthy, the industry is the maximum. The additional work is measured to substitute the wage.
- When the profession is unhealthy: If a new flow is made, it may represent a new set of "high-level" education and will have a low cost.
