Abstract. The authors examined the relationship between the frequency of exposure to violence in the home and the frequency of exposure to violence in the community. The results showed that the frequency of exposure to violence in the home was positively related to the frequency of exposure to violence in the community. The results also showed that the frequency of exposure to violence in the home was positively related to the frequency of exposure to violence in the community, even when the frequency of exposure to violence in the home was controlled for. The results suggest that exposure to violence in the home is a risk factor for exposure to violence in the community.
