algorithm, and are useful in some circumstances. We can think of a naive solver as a backward-chaining solver using naive chaining—that is, finding solutions to subgoals as they are found without saving those solutions when the subgoal occurs within other goals for the previous computation. This is the approach taken by naive logic programming systems, which are efficient enough and robust enough to perform satisfactorily. Using logic programming combines the good ideas of backward-chaining with the forward-programming efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also complete for finding answers from a logic solver that the programmer will make for other useful goals. It is well suited to get an initial idea with problems like theorem proving, or the other is a generally efficient method of solving.
