Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and blood pressure (BP) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group did not exercise. The HR and BP were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in both HR and BP compared to the control group. The HR decreased from 72 to 68 beats per minute, and the BP decreased from 120/80 to 110/70 mmHg. The control group showed no significant change in HR and BP. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively reduce HR and BP in sedentary, middle-aged men.

- Day and night temperatures that are longer than the standard atmospheric conditions will negatively affect the rate of soil moisture evaporation, especially during the night, that are far below the average temperature for the season of the forest.
- Increased moisture in the soil will negatively affect the rate of soil moisture evaporation, the length of the season may be extended depending on the soil moisture characteristics.
- The soil moisture evaporation rate is negatively affected by the presence of vegetation. The presence of a forest canopy, depending on the species, may slow down the evaporation of the soil moisture by 50 percent.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. For example, if the price of the output rises, the producer will increase its output level. This is because the producer's marginal revenue (MR) curve shifts up, and the profit-maximizing output level (where MR = MC) increases. The increase in output level is shown in the graph below.
