Party Government in 48 Democracies (1945-1998) J.J. Woldendorp,Hans Keman,I. Budge,2013-04-17 Since the 1980s political scientists have developed a renewed interest in the study of political institutions based on the assumption that institutions matter that is that formal governmental institutions and constitutional legal rules as well as informal institutions like parties and interest groups are crucial determinants of the shape of politics and policy outcomes In this respect the new institutionalism resembles the old institutionalism of pre behaviorist days but the crucial difference between the two is that the new institutionalists are committed to systematic empirical testing of their hypotheses at least in principle In practice however especially in comparative analyses this goal has often been frustrated by the lack of reliable data for a large number of countries Researchers have therefore usually been limited to testing their hypotheses with modest data sets collected for their own particular purposes Of all of the political institutions the executive branch of the government is by far the most important it can be regarded as the irreducible core of government and the principal embodiment of political authority with specific powers that are not lodged elsewhere in the political system Almost all countries in the world and certainly all modern democracies have an executive body called government cabinet or administration as in the term the Clinton administration that has the main responsibility for running the country s public affairs
