Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 women, 40 to 50 years old, who had been sedentary for at least 10 years. They were randomly assigned to a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes, and included aerobic and strength training. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle. HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the training program significantly increased HR and EE in the women, while the control group showed no significant changes. The increase in HR and EE was greater in the women who had been sedentary for 10 to 20 years compared to those who had been sedentary for more than 20 years. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively increase HR and EE in sedentary, middle-aged women, and that the benefits are greater for those who have been sedentary for a shorter period of time.
