Dummies Sandra Bronson, 2020-11-13 Perennials are plants that live for at least 2 consecutive years. Technically, herbaceous perennials die back in the fall and winter and then regrow in the spring. Some perennials only live for 2 years, while others may live for thousands of years. Unlike annuals, which last only a single growing season and depend on seed for continued growth, a perennial grows from the root system, enabling it to bloom through multiple growing years. There are hundreds of different types of perennials, which vary in size from less than 1 inch to 54 meters tall. Some perennials flower for long periods, while others like ferns and grasses are not dependent on flowers. Upright perennials are common in the garden. Determinate perennials, in some regions, die back in late spring, while plants have the ability to regrow.

become too late before the first frost. Do not plant in the fall while the average frost-free period is below 25 degrees Fahrenheit (38 degrees Celsius). Plant in the spring but not too late with plants that root out. If you have to plant in the spring, water them daily for 2 to 3 weeks. Plant perennials in the fall before the first frost. Perennials that do not survive but their roots do not have to get established before the ground freezes. Research a perennial to determine when its ideal planting time. The best time to plant perennials varies depending on the climate and growing conditions. Ask a professional at a local garden center but the best time to plant a perennial plant eventually will be in the fall. Perennials can be grown in the same location in the rear garden. For example, in the rear garden, plant a perennial around a tree in a grouping in the middle of a yard. Determine how much sunlight the rear will be an important factor in planting the perennials that will be grown in the location.

Flowering perennials are the backbone of any garden. Most perennials have a natural life cycle. Perennial plants die back in cold weather then sprout again next spring and the spring after that. What sets perennial plants apart from shrubs, which may also be perennial, is that garden perennials are herbaceous shrubs typically have woody branches. Not all perennials are created equal. Some have a brief bloom season and others flower for months. Short-lived perennials such as poppies, lupines, or columbines may die after two or three years. Dutch master garden designer Piet Oudolf, famous for his painterly landscapes of mixed perennials, favors hardier long-lived perennials such as salvias, Veronicas, asters, and Monardas.
