

My Passion For Arts And Crafts

At the age of eleven, I crocheted a piece of yarn into a yellow, lopsided hairband. After about a day's worth of wearing, the elasticity of headband gave away and it became an oversized mess. Still, I wore it as a badge of honor. It is amazing how a blasé piece of yarn could be transferred into something intricate with a work of a needle. I have always been an avid crafter. When my peers were out playing and soaking in the Vitamin D, I was making greeting cards. I would make them for reasons as mundane as telling my mom I loved the green beans she made for dinner last night; I just needed an excuse to pull out the paper and glitter pens and start a project.

As time progressed, my projects grew from greeting cards to the blanket I crocheted last summer-- it took three months and fifty granny squares. I have been lucky to have the time, the energy, and the resources to be artistic. My family has always encouraged my efforts, whether I am knitting a new hat or painting a woman. As my projects have evolved, I've come to realize that crafting things, useful or otherwise, is very much an important part of who I am. It allows me to employ my imagination, creativity, logic, and technical skills.

My projects are not made for the sake of making them. I feel a special connection to my family when I make things. I feel a connection to my grandmother when I use the crochet needle she gave me when I was twelve. I feel resourceful when I use the spare cork lying around the house to make coasters for the coffee table. Crafting for me is not just a hobby, not something I do when I am bored. It is a way to use my environment, to discover tools, and shortcuts, and new ways of looking at things. It's a chance for me
