

Learning Objectives Define what birth, death, and life expectancy are. Give examples of how these factors are used to describe population growth. Define what the carrying capacity is. Define what density, natality, and growth rates are.

Types of Population Dynamics		Definition	Example
Density-Dependent	Birth rate	A species's birth rate tends to decrease as the population grows, often because of resource limitations.
	Death rate	A species's death rate tends to increase as the population grows, often because of resource limitations.
	Life expectancy	A species's life expectancy tends to decrease as the population grows, often because of resource limitations.
	Life expectancy	A species's life expectancy tends to increase as the population grows, often because of resource limitations.

Lesson Summary

Describing Populations

Life expectancy is the average number of years a person is expected to live. It is calculated by dividing the total number of years lived by the number of people in the population.

Change rate is the rate at which a population changes. It is calculated by dividing the change in population by the change in time. For example, if a population of 1000 increases to 1200 in 10 years, the change rate is 200/10 = 20 people per year.

Carrying capacity is the maximum number of individuals that an environment can support. It is determined by the availability of resources such as food, water, and space.

Structured Population Models in Biology and Epidemiology Pierre Magal,Shigui Ruan,2008-04-12 In this new century mankind faces ever more challenging environmental and public health problems such as pollution invasion by exotic species the emergence of new diseases or the emergence of diseases into new regions West Nile virus SARS Anthrax etc and the resurgence of existing diseases in urban areas malaria TB HIV AIDS etc Mathematical models have been successfully used to study many biological epidemiological and medical problems and nonlinear and complex dynamics have been observed in all of those contexts Mathematical studies have helped us not only to better understand these problems but also to find solutions in some cases such as the prediction and control of SARS outbreaks understanding HIV infection and the investigation of antibiotic resistant infections in hospitals Structured population models distinguish individuals from one another cording to characteristics such as age size location status and movement to determine the birth growth and death rates interaction with each other and with environment infectivity etc The goal of structured population models is to understand how these characteristics affect the dynamics of these models and thus the outcomes and consequences of the biological and epidemiological processes There is a very large and growing body of literature on these topics This book deals with the recent and important advances in the study of structured population models in biology and epidemiology There are six chapters in this book written by leading researchers in these areas
