Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged men. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 men, aged 45–65 years, who were randomly assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group performed a 12-week program of aerobic and resistance training, while the control group remained sedentary. The results showed that the training group had significant improvements in physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged men.
