Rejection Sensitivity And Dissociation Among Adopted Adults:

Rejection Sensitivity and Dissociation Among Adopted and Non-adopted Adults Amy C. Olson, 2013 This study explored the veracity of numerous reports that adoptees experience a higher than average fear of reexperiencing rejection A higher prevalence of rejection sensitivity and dissociation was predicted among adopted adults relative to comparative norms Rejection sensitivity was defined as a tendency to anxiously anticipate readily perceive and overreact to rejection Dissociative defenses were predicted to be the means of coping to the loss of the first attachment bond Dissociation and rejection sensitivity were measured among international and domestic adoptees among people who lived in foster care and international institutional settings and among a comparative sample Participants registered through Amazon Mechanical Turk completed online self report surveys Data analysis revealed no differences between adopted and non adopted groups between international or domestic groups or between foster care and adopted participants for rejection sensitivity For rejection sensitivity significant differences between scores were found between Foster Care and a normative sample participants who had experienced foster care scored significantly lower than comparative norms Dissociation was not found to be significant among any of the groups measured in this study These findings suggest a resiliency among a non clinical sample of adopted foster care and international groups to the experience of early loss of a significant attachment relationship

Rejection Sensitivity and Dissociation Among Adopted Adults Amy Olson, Kurt Baker, 2014-10-22 Many theorists posit that the difficulties adopted people experience arise from reflection on what it means to be adopted while some adopted people assert that the transition from biological parent to adopted family is experienced as a traumatic loss of an attachment relationship Pinning down the relevant conscious and sub conscious experiences of adopted infants and young children is difficult to do Still in order for adopted people to understand impulses and govern behaviors which may stem from feelings associated with the loss of early attachment relationships it is helpful to peruse the relevant scientific literature This study examines domestic and international adoption as well as foster care and how dissociation and rejection sensitivity relate to the traumatic experience of loss and the reflective internalization of that experience Adopted people can decide for themselves whether or not these tendencies are to be found among their repertoire of behaviors A Survey of Dissociation, Identity Distress, and Rejection Sensitivity in Adult Adoptees Lee J. McLamb, 2019 This study quantitatively measures dissociation rejection sensitivity and identity distress among adults who experienced adoption as a child and the relationship between these factors This study also compares groups of adoptees recruited through Amazon Mechanical Turk MTurk and social media to assess whether these two recruitment methods achieve similar results An online survey was conducted of adopted adults and non adopted adults to serve as controls using both MTurk and social media A total of 539 participants were recruited representing 151 non adopted individuals recruited exclusively through Mturk and 388 adoptees 247 of whom were recruited through MTurk and 141 through social media Significant differences were found between adopted and non adopted groups on the measures of dissociation rejection sensitivity and identity Both rejection sensitivity and dissociation were also found to be significant mediating factors between adoption status and measures of identity Significant differences were also found between adoptee recruitment methods on measures of dissociation identity distress and rejection sensitivity with large effect sizes for dissociation and identity distress and a small effect size for rejection sensitivity Implications for consideration in a clinical setting are discussed as well as potential areas of future research

Adults Doris Bertocci, Christopher Deeg, Linda A. Adult Adoptees and Writing to Heal Liz DeBetta, 2023-06-19 We live in a world where conversations about trauma are becoming commonplace and adopted people are using their voices to educate the general public about the effects of maternal separation and genealogical bewilderment But for many adult adoptees the act of speaking truth to power is still fraught Personal writing can unlock long held silences and help adult adoptees feel empowered to rewrite their narratives The need to deconstruct dominant narratives about adoption and its inherent loss and trauma is necessary if we are to reform an institution that has damaged many generations of mothers and children Because many adoptees do not have access to adoption and trauma competent therapists writing is an accessible therapeutic modality that can be used to reframe narratives that position adoptees as the object rather than the subject Adult Adoptees and Writing to Heal shares the framework and method of using writing as a practice for adult adoptees therapists teachers and researchers interested in learning how to migrate and heal embodied trauma It analyzes lived experience and the author's own writing to develop a methodology for moving toward wholeness by writing and speaking the truth of internal adoptee experiences
