Function of the Nervous System

The nervous system has three specific functions:

1. Receives information from the environment and initiates responses to that information.
2. Coordinates and controls the body's activities.
3. Regulates and controls the body's internal environment.

The nervous system is divided into two main parts: the central nervous system and the peripheral nervous system.

The central nervous system consists of the brain and the spinal cord.

The peripheral nervous system consists of all the other nerves in the body.

The brain is the control center of the nervous system. It receives information from the senses and sends out instructions to the rest of the body.

The spinal cord is a long, thin tube that runs down the back. It carries messages between the brain and the rest of the body.

The nerves are bundles of fibers that carry messages between the brain, spinal cord, and the rest of the body.

The nervous system is essential for the body to function properly. It controls everything we do, from breathing to thinking.

The nervous system is very complex and important for our health and well-being.

- Cerebellum (responsible for balance and coordination)
- Brainstem (responsible for basic life functions like breathing and heart rate)

Central Nervous System (CNS): The brain and spinal cord.

Peripheral Nervous System (PNS): All other nerves in the body.

The PNS is further divided into the somatic nervous system (controlling voluntary movements) and the autonomic nervous system (controlling involuntary functions like heart rate and digestion).

Structure of the Nervous System
