

IV. Cause and Effect of the disaster

Cause of the disaster

The accident was primarily caused by maintenance work simultaneously carried out on one of the high-pressure condensate pumps and a safety valve, which led to a leak in condensates.

After the removal of one of the gas condensate pump's pressure safety valve for maintenance, the condensate pipe remained temporarily sealed with a blind flange as the work was not completed during the day shift. A night crew turned on the alternate pump, without being aware that the maintenance being carried out on one of the pumps wasn't done yet. Following this, the blind flange firewalls failed to handle the pressure, leading to several explosions.

The fire at the platform intensified due to the failure in closing the flow of gas from the Tartan Platform. The automatic firefighting system had remained deactivated since divers worked underwater before the incident. Helicopter operations were hampered due to the amount of heat and smoke.

Effects of the accident

The most invaluable prices as the consequences of the accident were life of 165 workmen (out of 226) on board and 2 men from the fast rescue boat. Around 70% peoples on the platform dead resulted from the tragic accident. According to the Cullen's report, there was US$ 3.4 billion cost in property damage and around 100 kg of hydrocarbons loss which containment to the marine but it only insured around US$ 1.4 billion by the Insurers Lloyd of London. Some of the survivors were badly injured and loss parts of their body.
