Introduction

The Adventist group was established in the 1830s after the revelation of William Miller, who prophesied that Jesus Christ would return to earth, but when his prophecy failed to materialize, the movement split into factions. One of these splinter groups was organized by Charles Russell, who started disputing some of the traditional perspectives within Christianity and established himself as a controversial and independent Adventist teacher in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. His followers originally called themselves Bible Students, who devoted themselves to intense study of the group's literature. Russell continued to minister, convert, and publish magazines, which were distributed from door-to-door and on streets and made the group's membership grow into neighboring states, and the Jehovah's Witnesses (JWs) were born. Although JWs share similarities with Christian denominations, the followers do not believe that Christ is divine; instead, they consider him a lesser god. While Christians believe that God, Jesus, and the Holy Ghost are forms of God's presence, the Jehovah's Witnesses think that Jehovah is the true God and the other two are separate entities.

Analysis of the Opposing Worldview

The JW adherents believe in various orthodox Christian views and several perspectives that are unique to the group. However, the major point of contention between Witnesses and various Christian denominations is their worldview of the Holy Trinity. The main diversion between these two factions is that JW followers do not believe in the unity of Father, Son, and the Holy Ghost as a single being. The Witnesses affirm that Father, also referred to as Jehovah, is the only the most high God. On the other hand, they view Jesus Christ as the Archangel Michael or the firstborn created by Jehovah before everything and the physical world existed. In this context, Jesus is not equal to the Father, in eternity or power, though he is a mighty god. Therefore, the Witnesses concluded that Jesus was inferior to God since he was created. The Witnesses' non-Trinitarian teachings also liken the Holy Spirit to powerful, impersonal, and unseen force under the control of the supreme God.

Selective Conscientious Objection Michael F Noone Jr,2019-06-04 Demographic trends indicate that if the size of our nation s military forces is to be maintained through the 1990s a larger proportion of the declining number of eligible young men and women must be recruited and retained Some experts have suggested that it may be necessary to return to conscription in order to achieve the necessary force levels However the pool of young people on whom the military must rely have had the unprecedented experience of having been exhorted for most of their lives to conscientiously question the use of armed force Our political and moral systems are in conflict over their right to refuse military service Ninety four percent of Americans believe in God and seventy percent attend a church or synagogue 1 Their religious leaders insist on the individual s obligation to selectively object to the use of military force and urge that the law be changed to protect selective objectors At present the legal system recognizes only the conscientious objection claims of complete pacifists who need not be religiously motivated

Refugee and Labour Movements in Sub-Saharan Africa Jonathan Baker,Roger Zetter,1995 This report is the second of a series on emergencies and disaster relief published by the Swedish International Development Authority and the Nordic Africa Institute It contains two papers that focus on some longer term impacts of refugee and migrant worker flows which have implications for the way humanitarian relief is conceptualised and planned The first is an overview of migrant worker and refugee flows in Sub Saharan Africa It suggests that the negative impact of exporting male workers from rural households has been overemphasised While there is psychological stress from family separations and the spread of Aids is associated with labour migration such movements can also be viewed as a capital accumulation strategy which financially benefits the sending households without necessarily leading to a drop in their agricultural production and as vital foreign exchange for the sending country through incoming remittances It also suggests that the presence of refugees is not necessarily an economic burden for the host country Refugees may as a labour source and as consumers contribute to development The second paper reviews the literature on shelter and settlement strategies for refugees It advocates a conceptual approach which is developmental rather than relief oriented an approach which integrates refugees and hosts needs and puts emphasis on tackling the long term consequences of mass forced migration Current practice is critically appraised to draw out the lessons of best practice and find alternatives to encampment style shelter The author does not believe that the integrated planning and durable housing which he advocates would dissuade refugees from repatriating
