

Teen Pregnancy Research Paper

According to CDC (Center for disease control), teen pregnancy is on the rise based on 2017 records of about 200,000 babies were born to women aged between 15-19 years old. Teen births create an increase in money for taxpayers and states to payout. $16,000 dollars per teen birth is how much it costs the government to provide economic and medical support while a teen mom is pregnant and for the first year of child birth. Unplanned pregnancies cost taxpayers 21 billion each year, part of that amount is due to the public spending 4.4 billion on teen births. If teens are participating in intercourse, it is very important to use protection such as condoms and birth control. Condoms are effective at preventing pregnancy but are not 100%, condoms are 85% effective, which means about 15 out of 100 people will still become pregnant. Birth control is used by 62% of the female population, birth control pills are 91% effective, when all pills are taken according to prescribed. Teen pregnancy is an important issue that needs to be more understood by the people of society. 30% of the population of pregnant girls say being pregnant was the main reason they left school. According to the National Campaigns to Prevent Teen and Unplanned Pregnancy, only 51% of teen moms earn a high school diploma compared to 89% of female students who did not give birth as a teen. Many teen moms, choose to drop out when close to end of pregnancy. Some public schools are now offering daycare programs that can help the dropout rates of teens. On the other side of the argument, many public schools and community members believe that day care only encourages irresponsible sexual choices. Unfortunately, most teen mothers experience a number of negative outcomes associated with becoming a parent at an early age. There are long term concerns related with teenage motherhood, including poor academic achievement, lower occupational attainment, poor mental health, socioeconomic hardship, and welfare dependence. To understand a Teen moms experience we must start with care, empathy and sympathy. Empathy is the ability to feel or relate to what another person is experiencing on a mental, social, physical level. Sympathy is the caring aspect, but empathy is having the ability to experience feelings of another person. An effective way to feel empathy for someone, is by putting aside your viewpoint, and try to see the situation from their eyes, also listening and support is important because the more you learn about someone's experience the better, people can try to relate to what someone else is going through. Social life of a teen mom can be hard, all their friends might be dating, partying or just able to go out and have fun, whereas the new mom to be, can't participate in activities most teens can because she has the new responsibility of a new baby. Some teen moms can experience social alienation from their peers by being judged or talked about. Teen moms are also bullied, which can bring anxiety, depression, suicidal thoughts and drug/ alcohol use. Pregnant teens use drugs and alcohol to self-medicate to deal with depression and anxiety, which is bad because using any drugs or alcohol during pregnancy can be detrimental to the health of the baby, as well as the mother. Around 65% of pregnant teens say they used one or more substances during the pregnancy, nearly double the rate of non-pregnant teens. The physical aspects a new teen mom could experience are Voice changes
