

International Health Law (2021)

*Stefania Negri

This section describes the World Health Organization's (WHO) leading and coordinating role in the global response to COVID-19 and examines its most relevant normative activities. It covers the application of the WHO International Health Regulations (2005) (IHR),¹ the report issued by the WHO Review Committee on the Functioning of the IHR during the COVID-19 Pandemic Response, the establishment of a WHO Member States Working Group on Strengthening WHO Preparedness and Response to Health Emergencies and of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Body for an International Instrument on Pandemic Prevention, Preparedness and Response.

The latter two initiatives are of special interest for both the international health law and the international disaster law communities, since they open up the door to a significant law-making activity which will develop in the coming years along two parallel and to some extent interlinked paths. The first one is represented by the revision of the text of the IHR (2005), currently underway and based on the recommendations of the IHR Review Committee and the proposals submitted by some Member States. The second one consists in the negotiation and drafting of a global pandemic treaty which should provide the appropriate legal framework for comprehensive and effective prevention and response to future health emergencies of international concern.

1 WHO's Response to the COVID-19 Pandemic within the Framework of the International Health Regulations (2005)

Following the work started in 2020, during 2021 the Emergency Committee (EC) appointed by the Director-General (DG) pursuant to art. 48 IHR continued to meet on a regular basis and was convened virtually four times, on 14 January, 19 April, 15 July and 26 October.²
