Future Research Needs for Childhood Obesity Prevention Programs U. S. Department of Health and Human Services, Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, 2013-09-22 Childhood obesity is highly prevalent in the U S and has become a global epidemic The 2007 2008 National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey data showed that 17% of U S children and adolescents ages 2 19 years were obese and over 30% were overweight or obese Childhood obesity leads to obesity in adulthood and many other serious health conditions such as cardiovascular metabolic and psychosocial illnesses To assess the effectiveness of existing childhood obesity prevention efforts the Johns Hopkins University Evidence based Practice Center completed a systematic review on childhood obesity prevention studies conducted in high income countries This report systematically reviewed seven key questions What is the comparative effectiveness of school based interventions for the prevention of obesity or overweight in children What is the comparative effectiveness of home based interventions for the prevention of obesity or overweight in children What is the comparative effectiveness of primary care based interventions for the prevention of obesity or overweight in children What is the comparative effectiveness of childcare setting based interventions for the prevention of obesity or overweight in children What is the comparative effectiveness of community based or environment level interventions for the prevention of obesity or overweight in children What is the comparative effectiveness of consumer health informatics applications for the prevention of obesity or overweight in children What is the comparative effectiveness of multi setting interventions for the prevention of obesity or overweight in children Though the strength of evidence is moderate to high for school based interventions the limited number of studies and insufficient or low strength of evidence to support interventions in other settings made it difficult to conclude that interventions in other settings could effectively prevent childhood obesity Based on the evidence gaps in these settings we identified the following as Future Research Needs Future research is needed on interventions delivered in settings other than schools or home While there have been other reviews on the effectiveness of interventions on food and nutrition policies at school on changes in children s diet and school food environments there are still gaps in the literature on some aspects such as the impact of regulations on food availability and its impact on obesity prevention Only a few studies that we reviewed used social marketing to deliver messages on nutrition physical activity and health This approach might be integrated with other intervention components to create an atmosphere favorable to healthy and active lifestyles and related behavioral changes Further testing of the value of consumer health informatics products for obesity prevention is needed In addition there is a lack of evidence on the impact of regional or national policies on childhood obesity prevention Further research might be conducted with stratified analyses on subgroups such as by gender age race ethnicity or socioeconomic status There were methodological limitations of the reviewed studies which suggest that future research might improve upon the methods Few of the studies we reviewed reported process evaluation which would provide useful insight regarding why some studies might detect desirable effect of the intervention Future studies need to design innovative approaches that have a high likelihood of sustainability This may be designed to take advantage of other existing public health government or other organization supported programs or try to gain more support and engagement from related key stakeholders The objective of this report is to prioritize the needs for research addressing gaps in the existing literature on the effectiveness of childhood obesity prevention programs by engaging expert stakeholders using a modified Delphi method

Causes and Risk Factors Patrick Kimuyu,2017-11-21 Essay from the year 2016 in the subject Health Public Health grade 1 Egerton University language English abstract Obesity among children aged 6 12 years has become an enormous challenge to the global healthcare systems Currently the prevalence rate of obesity has reached the highest range in the past two decades and this is attributable to the low well being and overall health among children which is estimated to have decreased by 37% compared to the case in 1970s Childhood obesity is distributed to all parts of the world even though western countries have long been associated with high prevalence but such trends seem to have changed Currently developing countries account for about 35 million obese and overweight children of the total 43 million globally Obesity among children poses risk to the future adult generation thus it requires appropriate intervention to reduce its burden It is believed that socio economic factors are to blame for the high prevalence of childhood obesity. For instance, economic and educational statuses of households influence the lifestyle of family members especially with regard to dietary habits. Therefore, introducing health measures to promote health education among children and the young people in educational systems will help to reduce its prevalence in future, thus reducing its burden.

The Economics of Obesity Tomas Philipson, Carolanne Dai, 2005

Since the mid 1970s the prevalence of obesity and overweight has increased dramatically in the United States. The prevalence of overweight has tripled among children and adolescents and nearly two out of three adult Americans are either overweight or obese. Although high health, social, and economic costs are known to be associated with obesity, the underlying causes of weight gain are less understood. At a basic level, weight gain and obesity are the result of individual choices. Consequently, economics as a discipline that studies how individuals use limited resources to attain alternative ends can provide unique insight into the actions and forces that cause individuals to gain excessive weight.

In April 2003, the United States Department of Agriculture's Economic Research Service and the University of Chicago's Irving B. Harris Graduate School of Public Policy Studies and the George J. Stigler Center for the Study of the Economy and the State jointly hosted a workshop on the Economics of Obesity. The purpose was to provide an overview of leading health economics research on the causes and consequences of rising obesity in the United States. Topics included the role of technological change in explaining both the long and short term trends in obesity; the role of maternal employment in child obesity; the impact of obesity on wages and health insurance; behavioral economics as applied to obesity; and the challenges in measuring energy intakes and physical activity. The workshop also discussed policy implications and future directions for obesity research. This report presents a summary of the papers and the discussions presented at the workshop.
