How to Self-Assess Health-Related Fitness (HRF) Status, Barriers to Physical Activity Participation, and One's Diet.

5 components of Health-Related Fitness (HRF):

Body Composition

(also known as body fat percent) refers to the ratio between lean body mass and fat. The traditional method of measuring body fat is through skinfold measurements. It refers to the fat, bone, and muscle percentage in your body.

Muscular Endurance

Muscular endurance refers to the ability of a given muscle to exert force. Consistently and repetitively, over a period of time. Muscular endurance is how many times you can move that weight without getting exhausted (very tired).

Cardiorespiratory Endurance

Cardiorespiratory endurance is the ability to perform large-muscle, whole-body exercise at moderate to high intensities for extended periods of time (Saltin, 1973).

Muscular Strength

Refers to the greatest amount of force that can be generated from a single maximal effort. Muscular strength is the amount of force you put out or the amount of weight you can lift.

Flexibility

The ability of a joint or series of joints to move through an unrestricted, pain-free range of motion. These are activities that improve the ability of a joint to maintain the movement necessary for carrying out daily tasks and physical activity.

Barriers to Physical Activity Participation and One's Diet.

The biggest obstacle to a regular physical activity routine that most of us are aware of is a lack of time. Even though we have the best of intentions to be more active, work, family responsibilities, and other aspects of daily life frequently get in the way. There are many additional barriers that vary by the person and life circumstance such as lack of time, lack of motivation and/or energy, lack of resources/equipment, high costs, and lack of facilities.

reference provides teachers with valuable insights for using research to improve their teaching. Putting Research to Work in Elementary Physical Education: Conversations in the Gym lets readers eavesdrop on a career-long conversation between a well-known scholar and a top-notch teacher who have a combined 75 years of professional physical education experience. Together they take a close look at 30 studies to help educators learn how to glean valuable information from research. The book opens a window into the minds of 69 scholars as they puzzle about teachers, students, and programs. Readers do not need a highly technical vocabulary, advanced scientific or mathematical knowledge, or a detailed background concerning research methods. The authors have provided translations in the form of brief nontechnical annotations that teachers and other nonresearchers will actually enjoy reading. Each study is briefly described and then commented on from a researcher's perspective, a teacher's perspective, and finally a shared perspective. The 30 reports address important practical issues recognizable to anyone familiar with what happens in a physical education class. The book shows how the studies can be useful to teachers in their own work and it points out how valuable information from research can be used to improve teaching. The book also demonstrates how stimulating and fruitful dialogue can be when the knowledge of researchers and practitioners is brought together around a single study. By discussing each study from both perspectives, the book sheds light on the common ground between researchers and physical educators and fosters mutual respect between the two. The varied perspectives can also provide a valuable springboard for thought-provoking discussions among colleagues in a school setting or in a graduate-level physical education course. The book presents 12 guidelines that will help readers navigate through the difficult aspects of the typical research report, plus four annotated bibliographies to help readers explore topics that are more specific and more advanced. No other resource makes such a diverse group of studies so accessible. If educators are to put research to work in their own teaching methods and program designs, there's no better place to start than with these straightforward conversations in the gym.
