Abstract

This paper assumes a Ricardian Economy and analyzes migration of illegal unskilled workers in a model of Cournot Duopoly where firms are producing homogenous and non-traded goods, and hiring illegal immigrants. The focus is on the behaviours of firms and the implications for the output, prices and employment of domestic workers in that industry. A two-stage simultaneous move game is set up: In Stage 1, for a given technology and vigilance level, each individual firm will decide whether to hire illegal immigrants. In Stage 2, each firm will choose the Cournot output level. Using this structure, we provide additional insights as to why firms hire illegal workers and what motivates these firms in their hiring practices. Furthermore the presence of illegal immigrants may create more employment for domestic workers and a social planner can be strategic in choosing optimal level of vigilance as we have shown that multiple solutions for optimal vigilance are possible and also Pareto ranked.

Illegal migrants are present in almost every developed as well as several underdeveloped countries. Examples include Canada, the European Union, India, Japan, South Africa and the USA. For example, in the United States, combined evidence from various sources suggests that there were at least 7 million unauthorized migrants at the time of the 2000 census, out of a total of 31 million foreign-born people in the country, who were not US citizens at the time of their birth. Of the unauthorized, an estimated 4.8 million were Mexican? [1]¹. A more recent figure has confirmed that the total estimated number of illegal immigrants in the US has increased to 12 million [2].

¹It can also be a very divisive issue in many countries as recent examples in France, UK and the USA show.
