County Advisers Meritoriously Engaged

What Will Ultimately Come Out of the County Adviser Movement—Better Handling of Soils and Stock Means Bigger Profits—What Several Illinois and Iowa Advisers Are Actually Doing—All Hard Workers—Soils, Dairying, Better Seed and Better Culture of Crops Leading Problems—By A. C. Page of Illinois

IN THIS last 10 to 15 years a tremendous amount of abstract agricultural information has accumulated in books and many volumes where it was not available for practical use. Library-stuff men have been loading ever their shelves and the smiling books, searching out new facts about the soil, about plant life and many such things, but after they had obtained these facts and written them out, that was practically the end of it. No one but a scientist could interpret the results of their work. Many of them were not practical men, and did not pretend to be. There was a tremendous need for somebody to interpret all these results, and put this information into the hands of the man working on the soil where it would do some good. So the county adviser has sprung into existence a new kind of a man doing new work, a practical, experienced man, half scientist and half farmer, who can interpret the findings of science into language which every intelligent farmer can understand and follow.

Illinois has the honor of having appointed the first county adviser, but the need for men of this kind was so general that other states followed in rapid succession and now the appointment of them is limited only by the fact that men properly fitted for this kind of work are hard to find. The county adviser is at once a teacher and information bureau, an agent and a leader in organization work. The work has been established variously in different counties, and some of the organizations are entirely independent, while others long waiting line. In some places the services of the county adviser are available to every farmer in the county, regardless of whether he is a member of the association or not, while in others the work is done only among those who are actively requesting and helping to pay for it.

The way this group of men has started into his new work, treading ground which has never been explored before and formulating their plans largely as they have proceeded, is a tremendously interesting story. Farmers have for a long time been individualists and have become slow to trust or take advice from one outside. Many of these advisers were young, and for them to talk to and suggest different methods for gray-haired men, some-days old enough to be their fathers, was not a task for any but men of strong spirit, thoroughly equipped for their work.

The fact that these men have almost universally succeeded and that their work today is making tremendous strides in solution to calm the fears of a good many who were skeptical and who doubted the possibilities of the proposition. Men who are looking into the future believe that eventually every county will be thoroughly equipped to give instruction in agricultural matters and will be organized either independently or under the government, for systematic marketing of their produce and obtaining the best results from their labor in tilling the soil. Through this county adviser movement and the accompanying co-operation between townships, it is believed will grow the agricultural high school and the county bureau, which eventually will put all agriculture in America on a different basis.

To those who have not followed closely the work of the numerous county advisers in the last two or three years, it will be interesting to observe some of the specific work that has been undertaken and partly accomplished, and the plans that are being laid for future work in these county bureaus.

Some Illinois Advisers

WILLIAM G. RICHARDT of DeKalb county, Ill., who grew up on a farm and went through the Illinois agricultural college with railroads on his hands, has based most of his work on soil fertility. "Better live stock, seed selection and all these things are important," said Richardt, as he started in, "but the basis of all substantial development lies in the fertility of the ground." Very naturally, as he had been a student under Dr. Hopkins, he began to grow the limestone, drainage, rock phosphate and more judicious use of barn-yard manure. Hundreds of tons of limestone
