The Gulf Stream was made by Winslow Homer on 1899, it was made with oil on canvas and its dimensions are 28 x 49 inches (Fig. 1). It depicts a man on a boat amidst a sea of sharks. He is wearing nothing but pants and has a serious facial expression because he is in a bad situation and has given up. The boat in bad condition, the mast and the sail are both damaged. The waves are violent due to the storm forming in the background. The sharks are encircling the man's boat violently trying to get their prey, and there are numerous patches of blood in the sea. But they are not the only marine animals out there, there are also flying fish to the right of the boat. In the background is a ship shrouded by the distance representing hope of rescue. The dominant iconography that make up this scene is a situation of peril and defeat due to the broken boat he's on and the storm that is approaching making things worse for the man. Yet, the man's skin color is dark and the time this was made was in 1899 when slavery was still not abolished, so he may have escaped. In this paper, I will provide a brief biography of the artist and discuss three events that led to the creation of this painting. I will describe the focal points of this work and from research explain their symbolism.

Homer was born in Boston. According to H. Barbara Weinberg who wrote "Winslow Homer (1836-1910)" for the website The Metropolitan Museum of Art, "Winslow Homer (1836-1910) is regarded by many as the greatest American painter of the nineteenth century."¹ His last destination was at Prout's Neck, Maine, where he stayed until his death.² Homer lived a productive life as an artist and has produced many works of art that carry on his legacy.

The Gulf Stream which was made in 1899 wasn't just made out of the blue, it took inspiration. According to "The Gulf Stream" on the Heilbrunn Timeline of Art History in the Metropolitan Museum of Art website, Homer was inspired by "one of his winter visits to the Bahamas."³ The Bahamas are near the actual oceanic current known as the gulf stream. Homer was inspired by what he saw in the Bahamas and decided to implement it to his artwork. Also in Lloyd Goodrich's Winslow Homer, it states, Homer was inspired by the views of the sun, tropics, brilliant blues of the Gulf Stream, and above all the negro inhabitants.⁴

A specific scenario that really inspired Homer was "when he had done a watercolor of a dismasted sloop wallowing in the sea, with a school of sharks hovering hungrily about it. Four years later, perhaps with an oil in mind, he combined this sketch and another 1885 one in a watercolor of the same boat, this time with a negro aboard."⁵ This ties with the fact that he was inspired by what he saw in the Bahamas.

The outside format of the canvas is a horizontal rectangle. The size of the canvas is medium-large and comparable to a medium sized coffee table. The boat is the same size as my tablet. The man on the boat is the same size as a router. And the sharks are the same size my fan.

The abstract elements have significant meaning. The sharks' expressions are humanlike, the main shark with his mouth wide open is exaggerated to show how fierce of a creature it is. Another abstract element is the exaggeratedly large tornado/storm in the background, it represents impending doom and further trouble for the man that is shipwrecked.
