Music Education

"Music is the universal language of mankind." Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's revelation about the universality of music applies even today in the education system of America. Over the last several years, funding for music education and even fine arts programs in general has been decreasing among public school systems, on the basis that more money should be spent teaching students academically applicable subjects in order to pass standardized tests. However, in a study by Amy Graziano, 237 second-grade children involved with both piano keyboard training and innovative math software scored 27% higher on proportional math and fractions tests than students only using the math software. There is a direct correlation between students' involvement with music and their academic capabilities. For this reason, the increasing lack of funding for music education is a problem, and the importance of music and other arts in public schools should be made known to officials and the problem corrected.

Generally, elementary schools have a required course in music. However, the once-standard instructional time for music of 20-30 minutes per day has been reduced in most schools to the same amount of time on a weekly schedule. This minute time in which music teachers are available to a class drastically reduces their effective ability to teach music material. Notwithstanding the reductions in their ability to teach, elementary school music educators are still expected to produce the same results with students and some objectives have in fact been added. The primary logic behind budget cuts in the fine arts department in elementary schools has

The relationship between music and language Lutz Jäncke, Traditionally music and language have been treated as different psychological faculties This duality is reflected in older theories about the lateralization of speech and music in that speech functions were thought to be localized on the left and music functions on the right hemisphere But with the advent of modern brain imaging techniques and the improvement of neurophysiological measures to investigate brain functions an entirely new view on the neural and psychological underpinnings of music and speech has evolved The main point of convergence in the findings of these new studies is that music and speech functions have many aspects in common and that several neural modules are similarly involved in speech and music There is also emerging evidence that speech functions can benefit from music functions and vice versa This new research field has accumulated a lot of new information and it is therefore timely to bring together the work of those researchers who have been most visible productive and inspiring in this field and to ask them to present their new work or provide a summary of their laboratory's work

Music, Meaning and Transformation Steve Dillon, 2009-03-26

Music Meaning and Transformation meaningful music making for life examines the musical experiences that students find meaningful and the ways in which teachers parents and community music leaders might provide access to meaningful music education This is particularly relevant today because school music often fails to provide sustainable access to music making for life health and wellbeing beyond school This book seeks to reframe the focus of music education within a pragmatist philosophy and provide a framework that is culturally and chronologically inclusive The approach involves an intensely personal music teachers journey that privilege the voices of students and teachers of a music making community and sets these against rigorous long termed qualitative methodologies Music education is shifting focus away from music as an object and process towards the meaning experienced by the student personally socially and culturally This is an important and fundamental issue for the development of philosophy for pre service and practicing music teachers and community music project leaders The focus now needs to be upon the 98% who could have music as a significant expressive force in their lives as a means of facilitating social inclusion for mental health and well being and to have access to the sense of belonging that community music making can bring as a lifelong activity The book aims to provide a comprehensive guide to music education that leads to a music education for all for life This book emphasises the maker in context examining the student as maker the teacher as builder and designer and the school as village The relationship between music making education and health and well being has been and is the subject of many research projects and national and international reviews Seldom though in these studies has there been any attempt to identify the qualities of successful and sustainable interactions with music making the qualities of good teaching and good teaching practice The focus of this book is to provide simple but effective tools for evaluating and testing the meaning evident in a music making context identify the modes of engagement and establish the unique expressive music making needs of twenty first century communities For further information see <http://savetodisc.net>
