| Outline of procedures:            | There are two experiments to determine the enthalpy change. Experiment one: weighing out anhydrous copper (II) sulphate and adding it to deionised water in a polystyrene cup to measure temperature change. Then you plot the data on a graph and draw two lines of best fit. Extrapolate it at 4 mins in order to find the temperature change. Experiment 2 is the same just with hydrated copper (II) sulphate. |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
