

Measurement Strategy

Is there a systematic difference in test scores on tests of the same construct administered at different times? If so, what is the cause of the difference?

There is a significant difference in scores on the same test administered at different times. What is the cause of the difference?

Figure 1

Consider the dependence of test scores on time. If the scores are the same at all three measurement points, then the scores are the same at all three measurement points. If the scores are different at the three measurement points, then the scores are different at the three measurement points.

With reference Figure 1, the scores at the three measurement points are:

• Scores at the three measurement points are the same at all three measurement points.

• Scores at the three measurement points are different at the three measurement points.

• Scores at the three measurement points are different at the three measurement points.
