

Protein (A Poem) – By Dilantha Gunawardana

*Strings of gangly loops between helices and sheets
A creature that was born between ribosomal pleats
From a linear strand that folds finally to the third dimension
Bequeathing an enigma of mammoth proportion*

*Born within the womb of a maternal ribosome
To bequeath a sibling of the populous proteome
What rests truly inimitable in structure and sequence
An ambassador of a cell, bestowed her functional eloquence*

*She will be translated and embellished with chemical tabs
Yet she will never lose her true beauty, in cells or labs
She journeys sometimes for a kiss of a soul mate
Sometimes dancing in an orgy of a scaffold's date*

*She was born to evolution from a godly ribozyme
Who still lives in glory as a deity in his titan prime
In the biochemistry of providence, there lies the beauty of her architecture
Of amino-acid bricks that erect near-perfect fortresses of sculpture*

*A journeyman that channels down a signal's stream
Until destiny is found to realize a long-lived dream
Where in one small function, effector or messenger
Lies the scripture of biology, in the confluence of a merger*
