

Lecture 6 - Developmental Psychology

The school of human development takes a social constructivist view: social context shapes development as well as the individual.

Concepts of nature vs nurture and maturation vs learning are old thinking, perhaps relevant, but concepts of environment are very much important in understanding development.

Change is predominant, gradually progressing, proceeding in the 1. continuous way

Development is a series of accumulated small, incremental changes

What is the role of developmentally?

What is the role of nature and nurture?

The development of a child is a result of genetic influences, environment is shaped by the individual's characteristics in turn, and environment is shaped by multiple interacting factors.

1. Nature
2. Nurture
3. Environment
4. Nurture
5. Interaction
