53. During the last decade, there has been significant progress in recognizing, utilizing and strengthening the role of women and girls in the growth of the global economy. In 2000, the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) were adopted, which include the goal of achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women. The MDGs are a set of eight goals that the United Nations member states have agreed to achieve by the year 2015. The first goal is to eradicate poverty, the second is to achieve universal primary education, the third is to promote sustainable development, the fourth is to reduce child mortality, the fifth is to improve maternal health, the sixth is to combat HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases, the seventh is to ensure environmental sustainability, and the eighth is to develop a global partnership for development.

17. Another noteworthy achievement of the Commission was the creation of the National Council on Science and Technology, which was established in 1990. The Council was created to coordinate and oversee the government's science and technology policy. It was the first time that a single entity was responsible for coordinating the government's science and technology policy.
