Checklist: Service Improvement Plan - SIP

Definition

The service improvement plan (SIP) is used to manage service improvement activities and report on their status throughout their lifecycle. There may be one service improvement plan for all services or dedicated plans for the various services managed by the service provider. The addition of new items to the SIP is often triggered by service reviews, although other service management processes may also suggest improvements to services.

Typical contents

1. Service improvement plan name and its identifier
 - The name and/or identifier of the service improvement plan (if there are several service improvement plans, for example for particular sets of services)
2. Service improvement plan owner
 - The individual in charge of the service improvement plan (this will often be the service owner)
3. Service improvement initiatives
 - Items in the SIP describe initiatives (projects or individual items) of improving a service. Service improvement initiatives are often reported because they impact service quality (e.g. in terms of availability, capacity or performance) or are additional or further service scope or services in our service (new or changed). Typically, the following information is contained for each initiative in the SIP:
 - Name and short description
 - Shows the individual in charge of the initiative (often this will be a service owner)
 - Trigger (service improvement initiatives may be triggered, for example, by issues found during service reviews or customer meetings, requests for improvement or initiatives may, however, be proactively introduced by the service provider organization)
