Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 male employees from a large manufacturing company. Data were collected through a self-administered questionnaire. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among manual workers than among non-manual workers. The most common disorders were low back pain, neck pain, and shoulder pain. The study also found that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders increased with age and duration of employment.
