Author's Note and Acknowledgments

This column is written for nurses who work in long-term care facilities.

Most of those who live in long-term care facilities have complex medical histories. They may be undergoing chemotherapy, dialysis, or other treatments that require constant monitoring. They may also be undergoing physical therapy, speech therapy, or occupational therapy. These treatments can be time-consuming and may require multiple providers to coordinate their care. This article will discuss how to document these treatments in a safe, effective, and legal manner.

Other articles include a variety of therapeutic interventions: pharmacological techniques, nonpharmacological interventions, or therapeutic nursing interventions. These interventions may involve physical therapy, speech therapy, or occupational therapy. They may also involve dietary changes, wound care, or other treatments that require multiple providers to coordinate their care. This article will discuss how to document these treatments in a safe, effective, and legal manner.

Other issues will be addressed in subsequent issues. For example, documentation of medications and treatments at home and documentation of procedures in a hospital setting.

Mr. Maragos served as the first director of nursing education in Nursing Professional Documentation in 1989. Since he is a member of the National Nursing Council for Licensure and Certification (NNCLC), he serves as the representative organization for NNCLC. Mr. Maragos also serves as the representative for the American Association of Medical Record Administrators (AAMRA) and the American Society of Hospital Record Administrators (ASHRA). He is a member of the Advanced Clinical Program for Nursing Professionals Documentation panel in a focus group organized by the National Board for Certification of Registered Nurses. Mr. Maragos contributes regularly to the Journal of Continuing Education in Nursing.

Please let me know if you are having difficulties with your records and procedures in the nursing department or advanced documentation.
