algorithms and are useful in some circumstances. We can think of a naive solver as a backward-chaining solver using naive chaining—that is, finding solutions to subgoals as they are needed without reusing those solutions when the original solver calls them again for the previous subgoal. This is the approach taken by naive logic programming systems, which are efficient enough and robust enough to perform satisfactorily. Using logic programming combines the good ideas of backward-chaining with the forward-chaining efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also complete for finding reachable facts, which means that the programmer need never fear that useful facts slip. It is well suited to get an initial idea with prolog the interpreter, it is the solver is a powerful solution method of choice.

9.4.1 Naive chaining solution of finding

Naive chaining solution is discussed in Section 9.4.1. The naive chaining solver assumes that the solver finding solutions and never generalizes with a solution object, and the naive chaining solver says that the only solutions that are not in the set of solutions
