Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic and resistance training. The CON group remained sedentary. HR and EE were measured at baseline and after 12 weeks. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness and increase energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or natural light at night. To reduce the risk of circadian rhythm disruption, it is recommended that the amount of artificial light be reduced to the lowest level possible.
- Artificial lights that emit red light, which has the least impact on the circadian system, are recommended. The length of the exposure may also be important for the circadian system. For example, the use of red light for 15 minutes at night may be sufficient to improve the circadian rhythm. The presence of a red light in the bedroom may also be helpful for the circadian system. - When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. For example, suppose the price for the product rises. The producer will want to produce more of the product, and this will be achieved by hiring more labor.
