Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during submaximal and maximal exercise at baseline and after 12 weeks. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR at rest and during submaximal and maximal exercise compared to the CON group. The HRR at rest and during submaximal and maximal exercise also showed a significant decrease in the EX group compared to the CON group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the HR and HRR of sedentary middle-aged men.

1.1.1.1 Introduction

The first part of the book is an introduction to the book. It contains a list of the authors and a list of the chapters. The introduction is written by the first author, who is also the editor of the book. It is a very short and concise introduction, but it is very useful for the reader to know what the book is about and what the authors have to say about it.

1. Introduction: The study aims to investigate the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the mental health of healthcare workers.

2. Methodology: A cross-sectional survey was conducted among healthcare workers in various hospitals and clinics. The survey included questions about demographic information, work-related factors, and mental health symptoms.

3. Results: The study found that a significant proportion of healthcare workers reported symptoms of anxiety, depression, and stress. Factors such as long working hours, exposure to COVID-19 cases, and lack of social support were associated with higher levels of mental distress.

4. Conclusion: The findings highlight the need for mental health support and interventions for healthcare workers during the COVID-19 pandemic. Further research is needed to explore the long-term effects and develop effective coping strategies.
