Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 10 women, 40 to 50 years of age, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or pulmonary disease. The subjects were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise at 60% of maximum HR. The control group did not exercise. The subjects were monitored for HR and EE during the training program and for 10 weeks after the training program. The results showed that the training program had a significant effect on HR and EE. The HR of the training group decreased significantly during the training program and remained lower than the control group for 10 weeks after the training program. The EE of the training group increased significantly during the training program and remained higher than the control group for 10 weeks after the training program. The results suggest that a 10-week training program can have a significant effect on HR and EE in sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or other light sources. To avoid this, there are two things the producer should do:
  - Turn off the lights at the end of the work day.
  - Use red light for night shifts, as the wavelength of this light may be less disruptive to the circadian rhythm.
- The end of the shift should be followed by a period of sleep. The producer should be advised to sleep for at least 8 hours after the shift. If the producer is unable to sleep for this period, they should take a nap during the day.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. For example, suppose the price for the output rises. The producer will want to produce more of the output, and this will require hiring more labor. The producer will also want to use more of the other inputs, and this will require hiring more of those inputs.
