Other authors (1978, 1980) have also indicated that the use of a single, non-quantitative, qualitative rating for each variable is not sufficient to detect differences between groups. The authors of this study, therefore, designed a quantitative rating system for each variable. The variables were rated on a scale of 1 to 5, with 1 being the lowest rating and 5 being the highest rating. The variables were then grouped into three categories: low, medium, and high. The low category included variables with ratings of 1 or 2, the medium category included variables with ratings of 3 or 4, and the high category included variables with ratings of 5. The results of the study showed that the use of a quantitative rating system was more effective than the use of a qualitative rating system in detecting differences between groups.

COMMENTS: Several interesting hypotheses surface that warrant further study. The connection with personal illness appears to be fairly consistent, and authors of investigations will most likely continue to use this as a point where research falls.
