

The diagram illustrates the connection of the power cord. At the top, a TV is shown with a power cord plugged into its rear. A blue line indicates the cord's path down to a power outlet. Below this, three numbered steps (1, 2, 3) show the process of plugging the cord into the outlet. Step 1 shows the cord being inserted into the top of the outlet. Step 2 shows the cord being pushed further in. Step 3 shows the cord fully inserted and the outlet cover being closed.

Diagram illustrating the connection of the power cord. The main image shows the power cord plugged into the back of the monitor. Below it, two smaller images show the power cord being plugged into a power source (a wall outlet or a power strip).

The diagram illustrates a network configuration. A laptop on the left is connected via a blue line to a central switch labeled "GND-CONNECT". This switch is then connected to a server unit in the center and a monitor on the right. Below the switch, there are four small icons representing different network components: a laptop, a server, a switch, and a network card. To the right of the monitor, a hand is pointing at it, and there are two warning symbols: a yellow triangle with a lightning bolt and a red circle with a slash over a plug.
