Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program was designed to be low-intensity, with a target heart rate of 110-120 beats per minute. The program was supervised by a certified walking instructor. The study was conducted in a community setting. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The women in the walking program showed significant improvements in walking distance, walking time, and walking speed compared to the control group. Additionally, the women in the walking program showed significant improvements in self-reported physical and psychological health. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
