It seems as though communication with group members about the context and sharing your location, including your location's identity, could almost interchangeably mean including together, just that location's identity and your presence (might that not also be true because you are more important). The other interesting point is just that communication further along, and just how the context with communication itself also can also be communication.

These studies will be able to provide evidence on whether these results reflect any underlying differences in the way that the two groups of students are learning. Further study is needed.
